Virtual Professional Development Initiative

Our stakeholders indicate that their training budgets are in decline, yet their departments are simultaneously required to work harder and be more creative to achieve the desired outcome of well-trained staff. We developed the Virtual Professional Development (VPD) initiative in response to this identified need through discussions in the field with public safety officials and industry experts. Programs offered through our VPD initiative are self-paced to allow individuals to make the best use of their time in order to meet their learning objectives. The Physical Security Education Program, a five-module interactive course for those with a beginner level knowledge of physical security practices, was released in September 2018. The Verbal De-Escalation Education Program, another five-module interactive course, was released in January 2019.

Emergency Management Needs Assessment

In partnership with the Disaster Resilient Universities® Network and the International Association of Emergency Managers-Universities and Colleges Caucus, we sponsored a nationwide study to identify emergency management program needs at institutions of higher education. A research team from the University of Oregon Community Service Center conducted the research, analyzed the results, provided key findings, and developed a set of draft recommendations, which were vetted and refined by an advisory committee. These findings are being used to advise federal government agencies and the higher education emergency management field.
